THERE ARE SLEAZES AND

THERE'S HUMOR AND PATHOS IN THE WARTIME WEDDING

A Thousand Miles Away From Home, the Bride Bought Her Own Wedding Ring and Relieved the War-Groom of All the Rest of the Worry—Some Laughs and a Tear

THE war wedding is over. At four-thirty to the dot we sent them off with smiles and tears and a brick in each suitcase. And now things are quiet and we are thinking about it. The two bedrooms where the bride and her two hastily-summoned bridesmaids jumped into their clothes are all straightened. There's not a shoe-tree but's found its mate, nothing under the beds and no black silk stockings tangled in the powder on the bureau.

ETIQUETTE books' Little do they know of the bride who must get an alarm clock for seven and scatter the whole house at the same hour in calling from the third floor to the second to arouse her groom to go city hallways to get her license. How we laughed at the bride who, in a church and hired the limousine. Lucky and unique war groom who has nothing to do till tomorrow in the days prior to his own wedding.

CHAPTER XX CATCHING UP a bunch of copy paper I dashed downstairs, barely escaped colliding with a baby carriage on the college street sidewalk and ran all the way to Chapel street, where with only the fraction of a second to spare I caught a car bound for Ononda. The effort which this required satisfied for the time being the need of the moment, which Mr. Parks had instigated by giving me the news of an accident involving my sister Barbara.

The New Coats Are Different A Daily Fashion Talk by Florence Rose

IT DID seem that the designers of long coats had about exhausted their ingenuity and that there couldn't be anything new or different in coats for the coming season. But just a glimpse at the new coats convinced one that they are different with new ideas and very different from the coats of last season.

There are no nubby little changes in the coats of this season, that it is hard to enumerate them all at once. At any rate, when you see a coat, you do not have the opportunity of seeing the original, to have me explain the changes that have been worked into the model which is shown today.

First of all, let me tell you about the belt, which is probably the most striking feature of the coat. This is the belt which comes from the back and sides, and recalled to my mind when I first saw the model the first ready-to-wear petticoat I possessed which drew up with a string and formed a nice, lumpy bunch about the hips. The ends of the belt tie in a box at the left side. You should pay special attention to the width of the belt. For there is also one of the most important features of this year's dresses as well as coats.

There are two widths of sashes or girdles. In saying so, I would not attempt to go into detail and give you the number of inches that is considered correct, for that would be impossible as the width varies according to the model. The two widths, however, are very wide, or very narrow. The narrower of the two is the narrow. I have seen some so narrow that it took me a long time to make sure it was not a shoestring instead of a belt.

One of the new coats is shown in the sketch. Its features are a yoke, giraffe, and the smart gathered-of-the-feet about the hips.

Please Tell Me What to Do By CYNTHIA

Cynthia is a real woman who knows and understands girls. In this department she stands ready to help them with intimate problems somehow easier to confide in a letter than in any other way. If you are worried or perplexed write to Cynthia in care of the woman's page.

Doesn't Dress Up Dear Cynthia—I have known a young man for five years. For the last two years and he has been calling on me. He has been very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow. He is very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow. He is very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow.

I Wish I Were Twenty Dear Cynthia—I am a young girl of twenty. I have been going out with a young man for some time. He is very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow. He is very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow.

Present for Cousin Dear Cynthia—A friend in need is a friend indeed. So I am turning to you for help. I have a cousin who is in need of a present. He is very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow. He is very nice, but he does not seem to me to be a very good fellow.

Hog Island Speaks Dear Cynthia—in answering the letter of "Twenty-one" appearing in your column, I am glad to hear that the fears of her friend about marrying a very handsome man is most probable, the couple referred to in the letter are not yet married. As I presume, he seems to be an unusually handsome man, it is not surprising that she should be attracted to him.

CHAPTER XXX The Tiny Secret "I AM sorry," he said gently. "I had no idea it was so late! I hope this isn't going to put you out any?"

From the top of the stairs, Mr. Deland stood watching me as I descended. The light from above showed the clearness of his face. Some of the bitterness was wiped away from his eyes. He looked back at me with a smile. "That was the dearest little of Tuesday."

THE DAILY NOVELETTE MABEL MAKES THINGS RIGHT

MABEL carefully placed the dishes in the big, bright dishpan. Is further introduction necessary? Surely the discerning will understand that Mabel was mistress of the house, not maid.

Her gaze wandered often from her task to the view framed by the long window which had put in above the sink for this purpose. And the view—the problem was, the view—was so attractive arranged in neat plots and so gaily bordered by nodding flowers that Mabel's eyes were drawn to it with a real joy and gratification with every casual glance—the low hedge and the fruitful, John-did-it fields beyond.

In Mabel's opinion, the whole view was there for only one purpose—to form a fitting background for the broad-shouldered figure of John. She knew that John's arms were crossed and supporting his favorite briar in one hand, he was leaning against the gatepost and thought things out.

Mabel wiped her hands deliberately, and then she went to the kitchen. She felt that the moment for her to act had come. Leaving the dishes unwashed she went to the window and looked out down the path and halted, panting, at John's side.

John was the nicest man; so patient with her tears, so gently he would hold her in his arms and her brown head with his calloused hand.

BUSINESS CAREER OF PETER FLINT A Story of Salesmanship by Harold Whitehead (Copyright)

CAN you imagine my feelings when I heard Margaret and her mother discussing me? There I was on Wallace Biller's bed, that transient between his room and Margaret's open, and they were talking about me as if I were a thing that had gone down stairs.

When they began to talk I wanted to cough to warn them—in about two minutes I was afraid I would have to cough.

"Yes," Margaret was saying, "I think Peter is looking better, but he still has that air of cheap smartness about him."

"Come now, don't be too hard on him," said Mrs. Biller. "Remember, he is only a boy."

There was silence for a minute, and then Margaret said, "You know, mother, I like the lad. There is something so fresh about him—just a little too fresh sometimes."

"If you talk to him about a movie show, why, he knows all about it; talk to him about anything you like and he looks at you blankly and wonders what you mean. I remember saying to him one time that he ought to attend night school and get some business training."

"His only comment was: 'That stuff don't get you anywhere. When I'm through work at night I want to get away from it, not go and tackle some more of that business life.'"

"There's a lot in what you say," said Mrs. Biller. "I wish it were possible to tell him what his friends really think of him without hurting his feelings. I'm afraid, however, here he is, she does seem a shame that a boy—a really nice boy—in the making should be slipping back just because he doesn't understand what business life is."

"He soon got over his love affair with her, didn't he, Margie, dear?" "Oh, he never was in love with me," she chuckled. "He was merely in love with love. The poor little chap doesn't know the meaning of the word yet. Why, it was only forty-eight hours after I had told him not to be so silly that he got engaged to that department store girl. Just a frowsy-headed, gum-chewing mix that's all she is."

"Wow! Wouldn't Rosie be tickled to hear that?" "The trouble is, that as long as the lad has anything to do with a girl of that kind, really nice people aren't going to bother with him. He has to do one of two things if he wants to get on in life. He must either give up that silly young puss, or if he sticks to her all his friends will leave him, and he will have to be satisfied with those stupid, pseudo-smart, flashy folks who are the girls' friends."

Again there was silence for a second. Then Margaret said: "It's all so stupid, isn't it?" "What are you talking about now, my dear?" asked Mrs. Biller. "I was thinking of Peter again—just thinking of the positively dreadful way

30 WOMEN HIRED AS WELDERS AND HOG ISLAND WANTS MORE

Female Helpers for Riveters, Clippers and Caulkers on Shipways Also Wanted if Strong, Healthy and Between 22 and 35

ANOTHER field of war work has opened to women. Also, it is a field of intense manual labor.

The Government shipyard at Hog Island has employed women to do electric welding, a department that is comparatively new not only at Hog Island but at most of the shipyards in the country.

Thirty women will report for work Monday and Tuesday. More are expected, and in the next few weeks plans will be completed for a training school for women along the lines of the one now being used to train men.

While the first women employed on manual labor in the yard will do only electric welding, there soon will be women on the ways to help riveters, clippermen and caulkers. R. Morrison, Jr., assistant superintendent of employment, said.

To obtain employment in the building of ships, women must be healthy and robust and between the ages of twenty-four and thirty-five.

Only the strongest of the fair sex will be able to do the work. Morrison said, for the strenuous work on the ways. Special attention is to be given the general welfare of women workers in the production department, according to Morrison, and the training school will be operated the same as the one for men, the women being paid white learning a trade and receiving the trade wages when they have mastered the work.

He doesn't know the meaning of good English. In fact, he told me once that talking in good English was punk, and that you had to use slang to get any respect.

"More likely he would feel peeved with me," she laughed, "for while Peter is foolish he is no fool."

"I'll tell you what to do, Margie," said Mrs. Biller. "Ask him about his room and see if you can't give him a bit of advice. He will probably take it from you, particularly on a day like this."

"The first thing I would advise him to do would be to get a haircut. He has that yellow necktie off and wear a human one. It would look fine on a Kentucky roustabout, but on him—why, it makes him look like an animated aurochs' head."

"I must look it up in the dictionary," said Mrs. Biller. "You know, mother, I like the lad. There is something so fresh about him—just a little too fresh sometimes."

"Notice his clothes, for instance, they are horrible. He has that horrible yellow necktie off and wear a human one. It would look fine on a Kentucky roustabout, but on him—why, it makes him look like an animated aurochs' head."

"Oh, mother, that isn't fair," protested Margaret. "I once saw an advance agent and he was really quite a nice-looking fellow. He was wearing that sort of harmony."

"And yellow shoes, my dear," her mother laughed. "Darling, if I didn't know our friend Peter we might almost take him for an advance agent for a circus."

"Oh, mother, that isn't fair," protested Margaret. "I once saw an advance agent and he was really quite a nice-looking fellow. He was wearing that sort of harmony."

"I gave a little bow of acknowledgment," said Mrs. Biller. "And if he would only take stock of himself, as it were, and as Wallace says, get rid of the damaged goods and put in a new line, he would get on well. He must have something to him, though, because he is selling insurance quite successfully, and they say that's no cinch."

"You were the one who talked about Peter's sling just a moment ago," said Mrs. Biller. "Oh, that's permissible."

"I suppose it's permissible because Philip says it."

"Oh, well; it's different when Philip says it, some of the time."

For the Meatless Days You wouldn't think you could do much with some left over vegetables: potatoes, beans, carrots, corn, beans or onions. But here's what I did with them the other day when Mr. Hoover said "meatless." I made vegetable croquettes, and Jim said he was going to be a vegetarian for life.
